

WAYFINDING PEACE

Museums in Conflict Zones

A Special Presentation
Sunday, June 25, 1:00-2:00pm

In a world filled with conflict, we can seek solutions in the wisdom of diverse indigenous cultures of peace. If we open our minds, we can consider in what ways community-based knowledge may be utilized in resolving contemporary conflicts.

Join Kimberly Baker, museum education specialist, UBC Liu Institute for Global Issues scholar and contemporary artist, as she shares her personal stories from her travels and research. Following her heart, mind and spirit, her journey begins in Canada, then a Japanese monastery, a sacred peace tree forest in Kenya and conflict zones on the border of Somalia.

Additional Guest Speakers:

Jackson Oketch will share his experiences as a child soldier in South Sudan and the need for peace museums in one of the world's most conflicted regions.

Dr. Sultan Somjee, a Kenya born ethnographer, will share his experiences as the founder of community peace museums at the height of ethnic conflicts in eastern Africa.
