Teaching in Museums is a required course within the Master of Museum Education (MMEd) program at UBC.

The practice of teaching in museums occurs through a variety of practices including self-directed experiences in exhibitions and experiences facilitated by educators. This course will explore the nature and character of teaching in museums, with a focus on facilitated experiences, including key influencing factors shaping pedagogy, methodological approaches and research issues of related to pedagogy in informal contexts, and ways educator optimise experiences in and beyond museum settings. This graduate level course is a core course of the Master of Museum Education program. Classes will be typified by both instructor and student-facilitated seminars focusing on critical engagement and debate of the literature of the field in the light of various theoretical and methodological standpoints. Classes will also involve elucidation of key theoretical tenants through practical experiences examining teaching in various informal settings and provide opportunities for students to reflect on their own teaching practices.

Equity and diversity are essential to academic excellence. An open and diverse community fosters the inclusion of voices that have been underrepresented or discouraged. We encourage applications from members of groups that have been marginalized on any grounds enumerated under the B.C. Human Rights Code, including sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, racialization, disability, political belief, religion, marital or family status, age, and/or status as a First Nation, Metis, Inuit, or Indigenous person.

All applicants must hold a Phd in Museum Education or related Museum Studies discipline; have a track-record of professional practice in museum education; and experience teaching graduate-level courses in museum education. All qualified candidates are encouraged to apply; however Canadians and permanent residents will be given priority.
